

Welcomes ADAM WRIGHT as Director of Philanthropy

Share has hired Adam Wright as Director of Philanthropy. In this role, he will develop and advance a culture of giving by growing new and existing funding streams through new donor development, major gifts, grants, events and capacity building campaigns.

“We are delighted to welcome Adam Wright as our Director of Philanthropy,” shared Amy Reynolds, Executive Director. “With more than 12 years of experience in donor engagement, special appeal management and special event coordination, Adam will help to build, diversify and grow Share’s donor base and community engagement to support Share’s mission, vision and values.”

“At Share, I look forward to doing my part in dismantling and combatting the many inequalities that so often lead to homelessness and poverty for far too many in our community and hope to create a more equitable world for people of all races, gender, sex and status,” said Wright.

Wright joins Share after moving back to the Pacific Northwest from his hometown of Kansas City, Missouri, where he was serving children in foster care and youth experiencing homelessness at Drumm Farm Center for Children. His professional experience also encompasses advocating for individuals with intellectual disabilities at Special Olympics Missouri, overseeing the visitor experience for over 24 million visitors to Kansas City annually with Visit KC, and finding homes for companion animals at OTAT PDX.

In his spare time, Wright is an avid traveler and adventurer. Whether hiking at Mount Hood, scuba diving in the Galapagos, or enjoying the backcountry with his dog Rieger and cat Walter, he is happiest enjoying all this planet has to offer.

Please join us in welcoming Adam!
